Having served the business community in Scotland's capital city for more than 75 years, and being a witness to all the changes that have taken place in the interim, the McKay Norwell ethos is to provide a legal service based on traditional values tailored to meet the requirements of modern commerce.

Our highly experienced commercial team headed by Nick Hooke, is a popular first choice for enterprises, of all sizes, seeking a comprehensive legal service. We offer competitive fee rates that balance the provision of professional expertise and dedication with value for money.

In the case of business-related disputes, McKay Norwell endeavours to secure an acceptable economic and pragmatic outcome for clients whenever possible out of court. However, where action is unavoidable, our experienced and effective Court Practitioners, led by John Mitchell and Richard Godden, will pursue your case energetically and aggressively to secure the best possible outcome in your interest.

Our private client department, headed by Rab Forman, also specialises in a wide range of services of relevance to owners and/or directors of small-to-medium enterprises – e.g. personal pensions, residential property, inheritance tax, formation of trusts, etc.

Free 30 minute consultation provided.

To contact, without obligation, telephone, e-mail or visit our website.

We are located in Edinburgh city centre, just one minute's walk from the West End of Princes Street. On- and off-street car parking freely available.
