

Kent TV

Kent TV is the UK's first county council fully funded broadband television channel and was launched in September 2007, by Bob Geldof who's lived in Kent for over 20 years and whose company Ten Alps is running the channel for Kent County Council.

Kent TV is for anyone who wants to know about the county or voice an opinion on issues concerning Kent. The site includes hundreds of films about the county's tourist attractions, history, business, news, arts and community events.

Several local production companies have been commissioned to produce films for Kent TV

Leader of Kent County Council, Paul Carter, has emphasised that in the 21st century "Internet access is the best way to do business."

A Board of Governors, with representatives from the business community, public sector and local people is overseeing the channel.

Peter Gilroy, Chief Executive of Kent County Council said: "The idea behind Kent TV was to provide a community channel for everyone living in the county and to attract interest from business and tourists worldwide. The number of visits to the site demonstrates this is happening and those from outside of Kent will help put the county on the map nationally and internationally, which in turn should help boost tourism and increase business investment."

www.KentTV.com is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Bob Geldof at the launch of Kent TV

Kent's online TV
channel

Video journalist Evy Barrie at Kent TV